Notes:

- I really like the overall vibe of the microsite. The colors feel soft and friendly, and the typography choices work really well with that look. The font you used fits the tone and keeps everything feeling light and approachable.
- The gradient background adds a nice visual flow and gives the page some personality without being too distracting. It feels consistent with the rest of the design and helps tie everything together.
- I think the site would feel even stronger with more content and imagery. Right now the structure is there, but adding more photos, text, or small details about the topic would make the experience feel fuller and more engaging. Even a few extra visuals could help break up the sections and make the story feel richer.
- As the site gets longer, it might be helpful to include a hamburger menu or a simple navigation bar. It would make it easier to move between sections and would help the whole site feel more complete.
- Overall, the direction is great. The styling feels intentional and the layout has potential. Once we meet, we can talk through where to expand and how to add more depth while keeping the playful aesthetic.
